London~Year of the Beer

We have at last reached the half-century. No less than 54% of Greater London pubs sell real ale, compared with 43% a year ago. In last December's London Drinker, we published an analysis based on the newly-issued Real Beer in London. The latest position is presented here by Roger Warhurst, CAMRA's Pub Information Co-ordinator for the London area.

YOUR CHANCES of finding a real-ale pub in Greater London are now greater than 50/50, with no sector offering less than one third availability. However, the overall annual increase of 11% shown in Table 1 has not been evenly distributed and the gap between the most abundant and the most arid areas has widened slightly.

LPD = London Postal Districts.

OLD = Outer London Districts

Availability of real ale remains highest in the West End, with 80% of pubs dispensing the real thing, and the lowest in the East End postal districts where only 36% of the pubs sell it. Most progress over the year has occurred in North, West and South-West London sectors where the dramatic increase in real ale from Truman and Watney has been a major impact.

Last year, only Kew and Shirley among the individual districts could boast that all their pubs sold real ale. They have now been joined by Ham (7 pubs), Chislehurst (11 pubs), Kensington, W8 (22 pubs), Highgate, N6 (14 pubs) and Blackheath, SE3 (11 pubs).

As for the former 'desert' districts, real ale now flows in SE28, SW20, Harlington and Sipson. This leaves Abbey Wood, SE2 as London's last remaining desert.

Table 2 highlights the brewers' progress over the year in installing handpumps for real ale. The relative positions of the 9 brewers has remained the same but the Grand Metropolitan twins, Truman and Watney, are catching up rapidly. Truman in particular embarked earlier this year on a crash programme to dispense their new range of real ales, and as a result have registered an amazing 31% increase. Watney started later but are pressing ahead with the introduction of proper handpumps, so that 26% of their pubs dispense at least one real ale.

Table 2 overleaf

It is a sad fact that the brewery progressing the least is the one with some of the finest ales in the Capital - namely, Fuller's. Only 3 pubs have been confirmed as converting to handpumps over the year and, at 57%, they are only just ahead of Charrington with the other big brewers hard on their heels.

Of the 58 tied houses controlled by small and out-of-town brewers, all but 5 of the McMullen's pubs sell real ale.

Finally, 283 (84%) of Greater London's 338 free houses sell real ale, an increase of 5% over the year.
